"Fo it ends thus—it ends thus! . . . I had all the glory once that woman could have, and I sit lonely here now."

M'LLE. MORI. went in.

Once the populace throng'd, To listen and cheer; But the laurels I won, Are withered and sere. Where now are the phantoms That beckoned me on? Where now is the glory !-Alas !t is gone.

The softness of twilight Spreads over the plain. And shades of the mountain Are lengthened again; Thus, in sadness have days
Been counted for years.—
Morning, evening and noon,
With hopes and with fears.

With hopes that the future Would be what it seemed, In the days when youth laughed, And day-drehms were dreamed; With fears that the future Might sadden its brow, And vanish those day-dreams And be as 'tls now!

Youder lone-standing tree Once stood not alone, But the forest around
Has yielded and gone;
Nothing wards off the storm
Or holds back its might; The lightnings play round it, To blast with their light.

Like that lone-standing tree I'm lonely and sad; Gone are the aweet comforts That made the heart glad; Gone visions of love, fame,-.. Oh! my broken heart, Why continue to beat, So crushed as thou art?

While life's joys and its smile.
But awaken the pain,
There are none for me now—
I seek them in vain. Youder tree, left alone, Still points to the sky; Thanks, thanks, for the lesson, For why should not I

(Since the world is worn out-Grown so stale to me)
